The Center for Applied Economics and Policy Research and the Department of Economics Present

Dale Henderson

“Dual Mandate: The Federal Reserve’s Objectives and Communication”

Friday, September 27
3:00pm

Location TBA

About Dale Henderson:
Dale Henderson spent most of his career in two stints at the Federal Reserve Board, ending as a senior adviser. In between and afterwards he was a professor at Georgetown University. He has taught at Yale University and the Universities of Pennsylvania and Virginia. He has been a visiting scholar at the International Monetary Fund, the Austrian National Bank, the Swedish Riksbank, the Norges Bank, and the Bank of Japan. He has published articles in leading scholarly journals on topics including the gold market, monetary policy, and foreign exchange intervention, and is the coauthor of books on pollution control and monetary policy in open economies. His current work is on a comparison of alternative methods for analyzing productivity increases.